PARIS, Oct. 6.

Official dispatches from Madrid state that Senor Prim, a member of the Cortes, is in command of the Republican Leaders in the north.

Communications between Madrid and Barcelona, in consequence of the insurrection, are in suspense. The railroads connecting the lines of Bessa on the approach of the troops, between which point the insurrection is confined, has been restored from the Republican.

LONDON, Oct. 6.

H M Delegate Hall the Government at Madrid admits the real state of affairs in the Provinces, and declares that the insurgent troops have left Madrid to raise the Northern and Central provinces, and arrangements are to be made for the provisional Government to go to Seville. Reinforcements are being sent to Catalonia, Andalusia and Murcia. The Republicans propose to leave the provinces and then attempt a coup de main.

From Madrid we have accounts in the provinces of disorder. The republican leaders have left Madrid to raise the Northern and Central provinces, and arrangements are to be made for the provisional Government to go to Seville. The latter are reported guilty of indiscriminate pillage, confiscation and assassination.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE

Assurance Society of the United States,

At the Close of its First Decade.

DEATH OF SOPHISTRIES.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE

Assurance Society of the United States,

At the Close of its First Decade.

The system of Life Insurance illustrates best the achievements of the present century. Based upon the experience of the old system, but adapting it to the changed circumstances of the times, it has developed a new and more perfect system, which has already become the favorite of the people, and is destined to be the system of the future. The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, which has just closed its first decade, is a representative fact in the history of modern civilization. In addition to the usual business of life insurance, which it has conducted with unexampled success, it has introduced many new features, which have commended it to the favor of the insuring public. This is remarkably exemplified in the history of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, which has just closed its first decade, as "a marvel and a magnificence," in the opinion of the New York Tribune. A brief synopsis of the principal features of the Society's splendid progress in the first decade of its existence, is here given.

Ten years ago there were less than five life insurance companies existing in the State of New York, and these companies were literally grinding out thousands in number and millions in amount. The new Insurance Department of the State had just been organized, and for the first time for years had relieved them from the pressure of the axe for the investigation of life and health insurance companies, which, as we have said, had been conducted under the liberal provisions. Not from enterprise, comparatively, was the demand in the interests of the insuring public for the organization of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, as new, and certainly fully equipped companies, were not the true objects of the hostility and opposition which had been manifested by the old companies. Indeed there was no hostility, which the idea of the State Department could not, at once, have satisfied, but the jealousy of the old companies, which the idea of the State Department represented, for the protection of the insuring public, and the assertion of the principle that the insurance of life was a matter of public concern, and not the private property of the companies. Hence the opposition to the Equitable Society was not to the principle of State supervision, but to the fact that the Equitable Society was a new company, which, by its liberal principles, would compel the old companies to follow in the same liberal path. Accordingly the Equitable Society was not referred to the Insurance Department for examination, but was left to the tender mercies of the old companies, who, with their usual policy of opposition to all new ideas, were ready to denounce it as a humbug, and to predict its speedy failure. The Equitable Society, however, was not to be thus disposed of. It was the child of the times, and it had come to stay. It was the result of the progress of the age, and it was destined to be a part of the progress of the future. The Society of solidity and permanency was presented, and was to be the representative of such principles. The Equitable Society was not to be a mere money-making institution, but was to be a public benefaction. It was not to be a mere speculation, but was to be a public trust. It was not to be a mere corporation, but was to be a representative of the principles of life insurance. It was not to be a mere money-making machine
